Chevron Impact On Spatial Perception

Chevron is a distinctive V shaped tile layout that instantly adds direction, rhythm, and visual energy to a room. Because the pattern aligns in a continuous flow, it naturally guides the eye forward, creating a clean, organised look with a designer finish. The result feels structured yet dynamic, turning a simple floor or wall into a statement surface.

What makes Chevron truly special is its ability to change the way a space is perceived. The repeated V lines create perspective and depth, making rooms appear longer, wider, and more open. It also helps define zones in open layouts, subtly leading circulation and making the entire area feel more planned and premium.

Whether used in living rooms, bedrooms, corridors, boutiques, or feature walls, Chevron adds elegance without needing extra décor. It blends seamlessly with modern, classic, and contemporary styling, while the pattern itself becomes the highlight. With Chevron, every step feels like it is moving through a space that is thoughtfully designed, balanced, and visually elevated.

Chevron works on visual direction and perspective. The repeated V formation guides the eye forward, creating a sense of movement and continuity. This directional flow reduces visual breaks and makes surfaces feel organised, balanced, and visually longer.

From a spatial science viewpoint, Chevron influences perception of scale. The angled lines generate depth and perspective, helping narrow spaces feel wider and compact areas appear more open. This optical expansion creates a structured yet dynamic environment without adding physical elements.

Architects and designers choose Chevron for its ability to combine function with aesthetics. It defines zones, enhances circulation flow, and adds character without overwhelming the space. The pattern suits modern and classic interiors, offering timeless elegance, visual rhythm, and a premium architectural statement.

- Chevron shape brings a natural sense of movement
- Chevron plank tiles makes spaces feel larger.

Trees Over Timber

Caring for the planet is no longer a choice, it is a responsibility. Rapid urban growth, rising pollution, and continuous cutting of trees for wooden planks are putting serious pressure on our environment. Forest depletion disturbs ecological balance, increases carbon levels, and weakens natural systems that sustain life. Traditional wood based materials, though beautiful, often come at the cost of long term environmental damage. Today, conscious design and responsible material selection matter more than ever, as spaces must not only look good but also respect nature and future generations.

With this vision, we created Wooden Plank Tiles that deliver the warmth and authenticity of natural wood without using actual wood. By eliminating tree cutting, these tiles help preserve forests while offering durability, easy maintenance, and long lasting performance. Advanced surface detailing recreates the texture, grain, and comfort of real wood, bringing natural aesthetics into modern spaces responsibly. This approach allows designers and homeowners to enjoy the beauty of wood while supporting sustainability, reducing environmental impact, and building spaces that are both elegant and environmentally responsible.

Every choice we make today shapes the air we breathe tomorrow. Surfaces are not only about style, they are about values. When design decisions become mindful, interiors start telling a better story, one of responsibility, balance, and respect for what is real and irreplaceable.

Wooden Plank Tiles bring that calm, earthy warmth into homes, hotels, and workspaces while staying practical for modern life. They offer the look people love, with the strength, stability, and easy upkeep that everyday spaces demand.

For architects and homeowners, this becomes a simple shift with a powerful impact. A wood feel floor that does not demand wood is design progress. Because the most beautiful spaces are the ones that leave nature intact, and still feel wonderfully alive.

A Choice

That Protects The Future

Each Square Meter of Metro Wooden Tile Means:

- More trees preserved
- More carbon captured in forests
- More biodiversity protected

Good Design Is Thoughtful.
Great Design Is Responsible.

Every square meter of Metro wooden tile used on floors or walls represents a conscious decision to reduce pressure on forests. Traditional hardwood extraction typically yields around 20 to 25 square meters of finished material from one mature tree. By replacing natural wood with advanced porcelain technology, Metro helps preserve that tree entirely. A single mature tree can absorb nearly 20 kilograms of carbon dioxide per year, continuing to capture carbon instead of being cut down for interiors.

Compared to conventional hardwood processing and long distance timber transport, which can embody approximately 30 to 60 kilograms of carbon emissions per square meter, Metro wooden tiles can reduce embodied carbon impact by an estimated 25 to 40 percent depending on scale and specification.

Beyond carbon savings, Metro supports biodiversity and long term ecological balance. Forests hold close to 80 percent of terrestrial biodiversity, and lowering wood demand directly supports habitat protection.

Designed for both flooring and wall applications, Metro tiles offer a lifecycle that often exceeds 25 years without warping, polishing, or replacement, significantly reducing renovation waste and material turnover.

The result is a versatile surface solution that delivers the warmth of wood across entire spaces while minimizing environmental strain.

Recovering Waste, Reducing Footprint, Raising Standards

From production to packaging, Metro reduces waste, recovers usable process material, optimizes resources, and builds durable surfaces that stay beautiful for years while supporting responsible choices across projects.

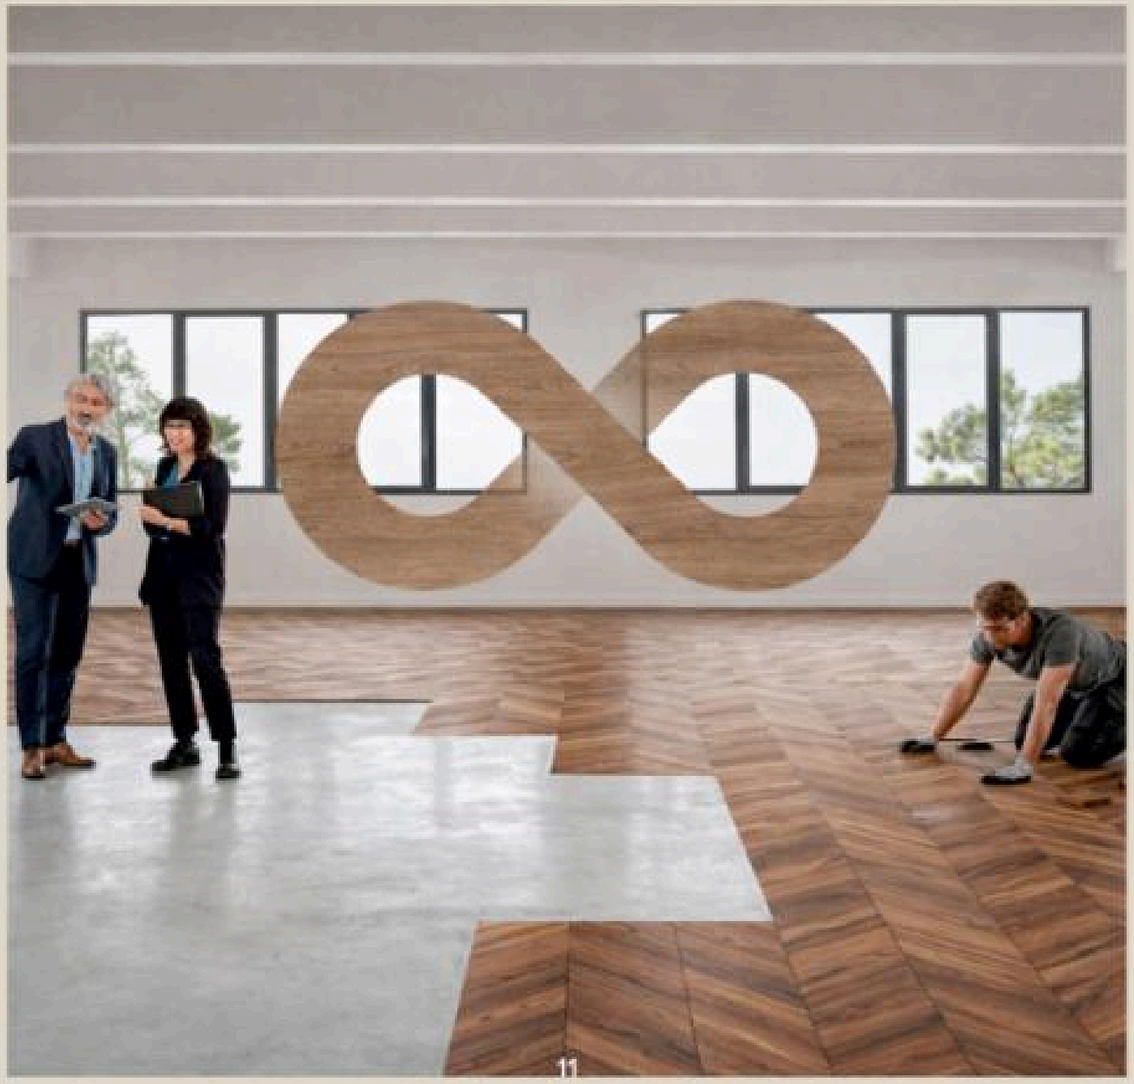

Metro follows a circular economy approach where resources stay in use for longer, and waste is designed out of the system.

Our wood look tiles deliver the warmth of timber without using natural wood, helping reduce demand on forests. In production, Metro targets up to 95 to 100 percent process water recirculation through closed loop reuse, and recovers most mineral process scrap back into the batch wherever technically possible.

Long product life also matters: a durable tile surface can stay in service for 25 years or more, which lowers replacement cycles and reduces renovation waste across the lifetime of a space.

Our responsibility goes beyond the factory floor. Metro is committed to certified green practices and transparent compliance, backed by documentation such as recycled content reporting, indoor air quality focused product standards, and lifecycle disclosures where applicable. We also work toward waste smart packaging, with targets like 20 to 30 percent reduction in packaging material through optimized cartons and palletization, and increased recyclability by using mono material paper based packs wherever feasible. The goal is simple: less waste generated, more waste recovered, and a supply chain that supports people, safety, and continuous improvement.
